

Free due diligence seminars by IHSA

Does your company's health and safety program meet legislated due diligence requirements?

The Infrastructure Health & Safety Association is hosting two free seminars on due diligence with leading law firm Heenan Blaikie. This is a great opportunity to find out if you and your organization are fully prepared to meet due diligence requirements, to receive practical tips and best practices relating to due diligence, and to have your questions answered by experienced health and safety lawyers.

Jeremy Warning, a former Ministry of Labour prosecutor who is now a partner with Heenan Blaikie, and his colleague Julie-Anne Cardinal will be discussing the legal side of occupational health and safety including the duties and responsibilities of constructors, employers, supervisors and workers.

These seminars will present important information for health and safety professionals, owners, and supervisors - information that affects everyone in the workplace.

IHSA and Heenan Blaikie are providing this seminar at no cost to our membership. Seating is limited to the first 100 registrants per location, so register early.
